Suppression and Undervaluing of the Arts. Danger: Lack of Support for the Arts History shows that art in all forms has the ability to create new connections, catalyze movements, and transcend barriers that divide us. Art has the ability to transcend the ego, the rational mind and habitual reactions and to touch directly the feelings and essence ...

For those who value the fine vocal art this is a winter in which the appearances of Jussi Björling have been too few, and decidedly too far apart. It began promisingly, with a Carnegie Hall recital followed by an appearance with Renata Tebaldi at a Symphony of the Air concert.

BJÖRLING in Puccini's Manon Lescaut (Met, 1956)

some, history of art is the way. Others find their solutions in the theory of art, in the analysis of color and the formulae of design. Still others need the practice of art, the actual manual process of painting and drawing, of making sculpture and of constructing model buildings and fashioning decors for the theatre.
